The Truth about what makes the United States a very RACIST nation

The United States uses it's Immigration Service Naturalization process and Census Bureau to put it's citizens into race based classifications. Historically, the United States has played favoritism amongst all of it's race based, ethnic groupings.

Sen. Tim Scott at RNC, 2024: "America is not a racist country"

RACE is man made, and does not exist in nature. Prior to the 1500's world societies were organized based on religion, not race classifications. European people had no idea that they were White people because racism hadn't started yet. And the concept along with the construct of racism started for nefarious reasons. Race was needed to prop up capitalism. Capitalism was founded on the construct of dehumanizing other ethnic groups based on skin color. The intent was to traffic humans into enslavement in order to build a new world in the Americas. None of this would have been possible without the authoritative endorsement of the Roman Catholic Church. As historians have outlined in "The Doctrine of Discovery".

The United States in particular has a peculiar way of classifying an ethnic group's race based identity. People of north African nations which have been colonized by Arab people are classified as White people.

Mostafa Herny is a doctor from Cairo, Egypt who had immigrated to the United States in 1987. Mostafa Herny is without denial a person of African decent, with an Afro-centric phenotype. Yet he has found himself in an unresolved legal entanglement with the United States Naturalization and Immigration services misclassifying him as a White person.

The United States vs Armenian-Americans - 1924

Tatos O. Cartozian, a furniture salesman, immigrated from Armenia to the state of Oregon and was challenged in court by the US government's attempt to declassify Armenian-Americans as White people.

The Origin of the Word 'Hispanic'

Prior to 1970 Spanish speaking people from the Caribbean and Central-American nations had been working and living as White-Americans in the United States until the Hispanic classification was created. The 1970 US census was the first time that the "Hispanic" identifier was used and data was collected on Hispanic citizens.

You will very often hear African-Americans defensively claim that it is not possible for Black people to be racist. The reason why is because the group known as Black people have never had the 'institutional power' to apply policy and impose legal authority over any other ethnic groups, or other racial groups. The group known as Black people have never utilized government institutions to make unfair demands for Korean-Americans to ride the back of public buses and trains. Or demand that Hispanic-Americans step away from the sidewalk, onto the curb so Black people can use the sidewalk undisturbed. Only citizens who classify themselves as White people hold such institutional power. And that is why Black people can't be racist! Africana people who are at odds with racism should stop speaking and breathing race based concepts into existence.

The Intentional Miseducation About Racism:

Unfortunately, in the United States most people believe that hatred, prejudice, bigotry, violence and discrimination is racism. In truth, these negative behaviors and attitudes are the symptoms of racism. The conditions of competition must be created first! The US government puts it's citizens into separated racial groupings and encourages these groups to compete for resources from government and the marketplace. And there exist something about competition that brings out negative behaviors and attitudes. You can see these behaviors play out most often with regard to sporting competitions. The negative behaviors and attitudes don't necessarily come from the athletic participants; but you'll see it with enthusiastic fans who get emotional over the euphoria of the competition. Check with your local little league coaches about parents who misbehave in the stands. You'll also see negative behaviors and attitudes flair between political parties during competitions amongst political candidacies. A simple table game of spades will spark negative attitudes and behaviors between competitors. RACE means competition! There exist something about competition that brings out the worst behaviors and attitudes in humans. And this reality is magnified in a highly competitive capitalistic society were ethnic groups are categorized and placed in an ongoing competition for survival and wealth creation.
